

10 STEPS

to reducing the COVID-19 risk associated with commuting to work

The COVID-19 pandemic has created uncertainty and stress for everyone. These are unprecedented times and require unprecedented measures. These are the steps workers must take when moving to and from lodging and the worksite:

STEP 1:

Conduct a self-assessment using the B.C. government's online assessment tool before leaving home. Only those without symptoms may proceed.

STEP 2:

At the airport:

- Charter flight: temperature check and complete health screening questionnaire before boarding.
- Commercial flight: follow commercial airline/airport protocol.
- For all flights: face coverings are required.

STEP 3:

Onboard, adhere to enhanced hygiene protocols.

STEP 4:

After landing, board Project airport shuttles for transportation to the lodges.

Adhere to mandatory face covering while in the shuttles.

STEP 5:

Arrive at lodge which has robust COVID-19 protocols in place.

STEP 6:

Temperature check and health screening questionnaire at lodge check in for workers arriving on commercial flights and personal vehicles.

STEP 7:

If any indication a worker might be unwell, referral to the medical professional on site who advises if the worker needs to be isolated. Isolation would take place at the lodge.

STEP 8:

Adhere to all protocols and enhanced measures lodge operators are taking in keeping with guidance from Northern Health – physical distancing, hygiene, hand sanitizing, face coverings and more.

STEP 9:

Undergo health screening questionnaire before boarding charter flight when flying out.

STEP 10:

On site: practice hygiene protocols in Project vehicles; mandatory face covering in all Project buses, and when traveling with two or more persons in light duty vehicles.
